The mobile app developed to assist and guide youth through the juvenile justice system and on to better outcomes.

What does it do?

It helps officers:

- Provides officers better insight into participant's behavior
- Improve accountability, compliance, communication, and structure
- Reduces/automates time intensive administrative functions
- Identify and focus limited resources on the most as-risk individuals
- Secondary notifications can be added for parents or guardians for truancy or exclusion zone violations

It helps participants:

- Provides appointment reminders and directions
- Access to assistive services
- Receive focused attention and help when most needed
- Assists with structure
- Less friction, less disruptive

RePath is a mobile application that's primary goal is to help officers communicate and engage young people on a platform that is comfortable and familiar to youth. Rather than observe the behavior and compliance of relatively few individuals, the RePath mobile app identifies behavioral variations and anomalies in very large numbers of juvenile participants. RePath has multiple levels that may be engaged based on risk. At a very basic level, it is assistive with reminders and communication with officers (chat, text, video chat, group chat/text), all housed in one platform. Communicate helpful information such as job fairs, skills development courses or other assistive resources. At higher risk levels, background monitoring, biometric check-ins, exclusion and inclusion zones are administered through the participant's smart phone. The app utilizes enhanced monitoring, data analytics and behavioral knowledge to assist participants in real-time. The cost of our solution is 1/100th of incarceration and 1/10th traditional monitoring solutions without the stigma of a wearable appliance. Best of all, the business model based upon the application being free to participants to eliminate financial hurdles that inhibit people from receiving the attention and help they need.
