IRIS (Intelligence Request & Information System) is a cloud-based platform built specifically to modernize how agencies manage intelligence and asset requests. Rather than routing information through scattered emails, spreadsheets, and phone calls, agencies use IRIS as a single, CJIS-aligned system where requests are logged, tracked, and resolved with full accountability. Every action is timestamped and attributed for audits or legal review.

IRIS allows partner agencies join as Guest Users at no added cost, so federal, state, and local partners can see relevant activity and respond to requests without a full deployment of their own. Granular permissions keep sensitive information protected even as access widens, so instead of each agency holding its own disconnected slice of intel, IRIS creates one shared, structured view across organizational lines, directly breaking down the silos that slow cross-agency investigations.
